What kind of exercise do you take in the winter months? If you are kept indoors most of the time try 2 pound dumb-bells. Some prefer heavier ones and laugh at the idea of using the light ones, but if you want good, hard, sound, straight muscle try the 2 pounders. Heavier ones make muscle but it is of the kind that raises in bumps when the arm is drawn up to test it. Parents would ward off many doctor bills if their children were given dumb-bells for exercise, the weight being proportionate to the child's age. Sandow says 2 pound bells makes stronger men than eight or ten-pounders. They can be bought of any reliable dealer for about 5 cents per pound and should be found in more general use during the months when out-of-door exercise cannot be had.
